Moderated Caucus 1

I stand in front of you as a conservative neutral figure on the issue of German Unification. There must be a neutral figure that ensures peace, the European balance of power, and a consistent economic state, not disrupting the import and export of the countries. I plan to enhance Britain's naval capabilities significantly, commissioning the construction of advanced warships and increasing our naval presence in key strategic areas such as the North Sea and the Mediterranean. This increased military visibility will serve as a clear signal of Britain's readiness to both defend its interests and preserve the economy. Furthermore, conducting joint naval exercises with allied nations will not only display our military strength but also reinforce our commitment to the mutual defense pacts we establish.

Additionally, I am prepared to deploy a sophisticated propaganda campaign to shape public opinion. Through carefully crafted messages disseminated through newspapers, pamphlets, and diplomatic channels, we will highlight the benefits of a balanced European power structure and the role Britain plays in maintaining this stability.

As the issue of German unification continues to boil, Britain will continue interfering as a major European power, and I am willing to listen to my fellow delegates to sway me to their side and form alliances.

Once again, I approach my fellow delegates with a neutral perspective. In the case of German unification, I believe that Germany should have a Constitutional monarchy. This form of monarchy includes both a monarch and a parliament or other governing body that represents the constituents. Parliament is there to represent our interests and make sure they are taken into account by the Government. The Government cannot make new laws or raise new taxes without Parliament's agreement. Parliament is made up of people we have elected and people who have been appointed (achievements and experience, do not belong to a political party).

Having a head of state who has been trained for the position since birth and remaining as head of state for many years with no political bias gives great stability and avoids the corruption that exists with other forms of government.

Moderated Caucus 3

Fellow delegates,

I stand in front of you with no comment on the current war. I would just like to reiterate some main points regarding alliances and actions with Great Britain:

As Great Britain continues to stand neutral, it will not allow any country to join its effort in colonizing Africa. This could be interpreted as bias to any partnering country and we would prefer to be hands-off. Even the ports alliance we have with Italy is specifically for trade and not military.

However, do not interpret our neutrality stance as weakness. Threats have been voiced against Britain, but remember who you are dealing with: a major global power. Any action of violence or with negative intent will be dealt with swiftly and harshly.

Moderated Caucus 4

Delegates,

As shown in the leaked directive by the Austrian Empire, the idea of biological warfare has been brought up. This is not an issue we can take lightly. In the 14th century, the Bubonic Plague killed between 30 to 50 % of the European population, and that was just from a bacteria we had not been exposed to. If deadly viruses are created, this war will never have a good outcome, but will only end with death.

A global response is not only prudent but essential. Strengthening international alliances, fostering open communication, and fortifying scientific cooperation are pivotal steps in navigating the precarious terrain of biotechnological advancements. The shared responsibility of preventing the misuse of such capabilities necessitates a commitment to a world where the potential for mass destruction is replaced by a collective pursuit of global well-being. We must compromise and find a peaceful resolution that leads to minimal death.

Fellow delegates, heed my advice before this issue is taken to the next level.

Moderated Caucus 5

Delegates,

First, I want to say that accusations against me are wrong. Since being ousted from power by my once dear friend, Queen Victoria I, I have taken no efforts in setting provisional governments in other continents. I cannot attest to the delusions or mental state of Wilhelm Liebknecht, but I have not even taken any action regarding the Indian subcontinent.

I would also like to state that I do not support Edward Von Simson's revolution in Prussia. A monarchy works, and there is no reason to change something that works. This is just decreasing stability in Prussia.
